

Appellate Litigation

Cases don't always end at trial. In some cases, our clients need the appellate courts to take a second look at the trial court's decision; in other cases, our clients have obtained trial court victories that are on appeal. In either event, appellate practice requires a particular skill set focused on sophisticated legal analysis to identify and argue the limited issues on which any appeal tends to turn.

Our attorneys have decades of experience in federal and state appellate courts nationwide, in both criminal and civil cases.

Larson attorneys have participated in dozens of appellate matters, including the preparation and filing of several emergency writ petitions to the California Court of Appeal. Many of the firm's attorneys have also clerked and externed for federal court judges, including judges sitting on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth and Sixth Circuits.

Larson's appellate experience encompasses matters across the legal spectrum, from constitutional law to antitrust, white collar criminal matters to regulatory disputes, and labor and employment matters to consumer class actions. We have prepared writ petitions for Fortune 100 corporations and other clients seeking immediate relief under difficult and time-sensitive circumstances. Our attorneys have also drafted amicus briefs for both the U.S. Supreme Court and California Supreme Court in matters as diverse as a dispute involving the reach of federal power over a state legislature, the navigability of Montana's rivers, and the ability of a County to charge a "transfer tax." Our briefs have also been cited by the U.S. Supreme Court.
