Hilary joined Larson after years of public service, having started her career in the state court as deputy defender for the County of San Diego. In 2012, Hilary was selected to serve as the Acting Federal Defender for the Central District of California by the United States Court of Appeals by the Ninth Circuit. Hilary was then twice-appointed to serve as the Federal Defender for the Central District of California by Ninth Circuit, where she served for nearly two decades. As the chief defender, Hilary was responsible for leading the largest defender's office in the country, with more than 200 employees and an annual budget of nearly $40 million, and oversaw the representation of thousands of individuals facing federal charges in magistrate and district court.

Additionally, Hilary was instrumental in creating one of the first federal diversionary courts in the country, the Central District's Court Conviction and Sentence Alternatives

As described at the time by U.S. Circuit Judge Kim McLane Wardlaw, who chairs the Ninth Circuit's Standing Committee on Federal Defenders, "as the Federal Defender, Hilary has led by personal example, maintaining high morale within the office during the government shutdown, creating a non-capital habeas unit, working effectively with our courts and other stakeholders, and contributing on a national level.
