OFFICE Los Angeles

Sara Morse's practice focuses on complex civil litigation and white collar defense matters.

Sara graduated from the University of Southern California (USC) Gould School of Law, where she served as a Senior Article Editor for the Southern California Interdisciplinary Law Journal and co-founded the Middle Eastern & North African Law Student Association.

During law school, Sara participated in USC Gould's Post-Conviction Justice Project (PCJP). As a certified law student for PCJP, she represented California life-term inmates at parole suitability and resentencing hearings, obtaining early paroles for two of her clients who had successfully rehabilitated in prison.

Before attending law school, Sara obtained a master's degree from the London School of Economics, focusing on political sociology. She authored a dissertation on the use of social media to organize social movements.

Outside of work, Sara enjoys Pilates and cooking.
